

Contributors

Sam Borowik will graduate in the spring of 2013 with a BA in English and a minor in French from Pennsylvania State University. He is a member of the Schreyer Honors College. He plans to attend graduate school after graduation and pursue studies in Medieval Literature or Translation Studies.

Elizabeth Carls is now a sophomore studying Public Policy at Stanford University, where she is currently involved in planning Stanford's annual Dance Marathon. In the next three years, she hopes to pursue her passions for policy and writing both at Stanford and abroad.

Jordan Delk will graduate from Furman University in the spring of 2014 with a major in Communication Studies and a minor in Poverty Studies. She is a part of Phi Eta Sigma National Honor Society, serves as an admissions ambassador, and works as the administrative assistant for the Communications Department. While she loves her time at Furman, she is currently spending the spring semester studying abroad with an internship at Children's Parliament in Edinburgh, Scotland.

Laurie Grobman is a professor of English and Women's Studies at Penn State Berks. Grobman is committed to undergraduate research. Most recently, her students have conducted local and public history research to redress the largely invisible, erased histories of local ethnic minorities. These histories have been disseminated publicly through books, websites, presentations, and on exhibit at the Central Pennsylvania African American Museum in Reading, Pennsylvania. Grobman coordinates the Center for Service Learning and Community-Based Research at Penn State Berks. She is the founding editor of Undergraduate Journal of Service Learning and Community-Based Research, a refereed, multidisciplinary, online undergraduate journal (<http://www.bk.psu.edu/Academics/journal.htm>).

Evelyn Henson will graduate from Furman University in May 2013 with a Bachelor of Arts. She is currently a member of the Fine Arts Entrepreneurial Society and of the Communication Studies Honor Society, Lambda Pi Eta. A Communication Studies and Art History double major, she hopes to follow her passions for both art and writing after graduation.

Robert J. Holt is a recent graduate of the University of Winnipeg, having majored in Rhetoric, Writing, and Communications as well as Politics. For those who are curious, additional details about the author can likely be found online, as he keeps fairly lax control over his online privacy.

Stephen Howard graduated from Furman University in 2012 with degrees in Communication Studies and Theatre Arts. He published "A Response to Monique Shetayh" in volume 9 of Young Scholars.

Andrianna Lee Lawrence is a Communication Studies and Political Science double major at Furman University. She published "A Response to Shannon Baldo" in volume 9 of Young Scholars and will graduate in 2013.

Margaret J. Marshall is a Professor of English at Auburn University, where she also serves as the Director of University Writing, a comprehensive university-wide initiative to enhance the culture of writing and writing instruction across all majors. Her scholarship focuses on the rhetoric of educational discourse, including writing pedagogy and the preparation of teachers.

Natalie K. Midiri is an English major at Rutgers University in Camden preparing to graduate in the spring of 2013. In addition to her work on human rights rhetoric, she is interested in media studies, genre theory, and visual rhetoric. She plans to put her interests to good use at a community writing center before continuing her education in rhetoric and composition.

Sara Mulcahy graduated from Bridgewater State University in the spring of 2012 with a BA in English and a minor in Secondary Education. She is currently working as a high school English teacher in Massachusetts and is pursuing an MA in English from Bridgewater State University.

Bernice Olivas graduated in 2010 with her BA in English—Creative Writing, from Boise State University, and achieved her MA in the teaching of English at the University of Nebraska, Lincoln. She is a member of the BSU McNair scholars. Currently she is pursuing her PhD in English Rhetoric and Composition and spending most of her time in the classroom both as teacher and scholar. After that, only the fates can say, but she hopes she will continue writing and working with writers.

Sean Patrick O'Rourke is Professor of Rhetoric in the Communication Studies Department at Furman University and serves on the editorial board of Young Scholars in Writing.

Rebekah Sims is a December 2012 graduate of Indiana University in English and Special Education. She worked at IU Writing Tutorial Services while at the university and will be teaching high school English in Fort Wayne beginning in January 2013.

Sarah Ann Singer will graduate from the University of Maryland, College Park with a BA in Women's Studies and English in spring 2013. She is currently a teaching assistant for an introductory women's studies course and the president of Triota, the UMD Women's Studies Honor Society. Upon graduation, Sarah plans to attend graduate school and pursue an academic career in rhetoric and composition.

Katherine Stuart finished her paralegal certificate at Johnson County Community College in December 2012. She currently works as a paralegal in Kansas City, Missouri and she continues to plug away at her first novel.

Melissa Thornton is a recent graduate from the University of Toronto with an Honors BA in English. She currently teaches English and French at a private school in Toronto. Melissa is applying for her MA in Romantic and Victorian Transnational Literature, which she hopes to begin in September 2013.

Olivia Weitz graduated in spring 2012 with a BA in English with a Writing, Rhetoric & Culture emphasis and a minor in Economics from the University of Puget Sound. In the spring of 2013 she will be moving to DC to join NPR as an intern in the Audience Insight and Research division. In the future, she would like to continue studying rhetoric and the media.