

Contributors

Sara Smilowitz | Marist College

Jordan Allums is a sophomore Communication Studies major at Furman University interested in political rhetoric and digital communications. After graduating in 2018, she plans to pursue a career in marketing and public relations.

Barak Bullock graduated from the University of Texas at Austin in May 2015 with a BA in Rhetoric & Writing Honors. As a student, Barak was a reporter for The Daily Texan and a consultant at UT's Undergraduate Writing Center. He hopes to continue writing about whistleblowing, surveillance, encryption, and national security as a professional journalist.

Luke D. Christie graduated from Furman University in 2015. In the fall of 2016, he will begin a doctoral program in the Department of Communication Studies at the University of Georgia. His research looks at the rhetorical formation and contestation of regional and national identities, particularly those forged by dissenting political and cultural voices in the American South. He is the author/co-author of several articles on Southern rhetoric and regional criticism.

J. R. Collins graduated from the University of Alaska-Anchorage in May of 2015, and is currently working there as a graduate TA, planning to pursue a PhD with a focus in rhetoric after finishing an MA in English in 2017.

Caitlin Eha is a student of The Burnett Honors College at the University of Central Florida. She is majoring in English with a focus in Creative Writing and minoring in Marketing. Writing has been her passion ever since she was a small child, and although fiction is her favorite genre, she also enjoys writing poetry, rhetorical research, and more. She hopes to establish a writing career prior to graduation and eventually work as a novelist.

Isabelle Gill is a sophomore majoring in Biomedical Sciences at the University of Central Florida. She currently volunteers as a teaching assistant for the university and serves as Academics Director for the campus's Pre-Med American Medical Student Association. Isabelle plans to attend medical school upon graduation.

Angela Glotfelter graduated from York College of Pennsylvania in May 2015 with a BA in Professional Writing, and she is currently in the first year of her MA in Composition & Rhetoric at Miami University of Ohio, where her most recent interests include undergraduate research and community-based research. She considers herself a foodie and enjoys having conversations with her students about the necessity of composition teachers in the first wave of colonists to Mars.

Meghan Phelps graduated from Oakland University with a BA in Writing and Rhetoric. She currently pursues an MA in Eastern Michigan University's (EMU) Written Communications program. In addition to taking graduate courses, she teaches First-Year Composition and works as a Writing Consultant in EMU's Writing Center.

Jessica Recce is a junior at Marist College majoring in English and Adolescent Education. She currently works as a tutor in the college's Academic Learning Center. Upon graduating from Marist in 2017, Jessica plans to pursue a career as a high school English teacher.

Natalie Saleh graduated from Baylor University in 2015 with a BA in Professional Writing. She is currently attending Oregon State University working on her MA in English with a concentration in Rhetoric, Writing, and Culture.

Sara Smilowitz is currently studying English with a writing concentration at Marist College. She is a member of Sigma Tau Delta International English Honor Society and has presented at the annual conference. Sara will be graduating in 2016 and hopes to have figured out what her next step is before that happens.