

CONTRIBUTORS

Gabby Bunko is an English (Writing, Rhetorics, and Literacies) PhD student at Arizona State University, currently teaching first-year writing. She graduated from Montana State University in Spring 2023 with a Bachelor's in English: Writing (with a focus in Rhetoric) and English: Literature with a minor in Hispanic Studies.

Anusha Kothari is an Anthropology and Human Biology major at Emory University. Her research interests lie at the intersection of medical and biological anthropology, public health, and sociolinguistics. After college, she plans to attend medical school.

Isabelle Lundin graduated from Oakland University with her BA in writing and rhetoric in 2023 and has since moved to Boston to pursue an MA in English at Northeastern University. Here, she is continuing her interests in rhetoric and composition and writing center studies. She hopes to be a writing center director someday.

Karen Quick is an English Writing and Psychology double major at Montana State University. Her short story, "The Bird Bag," earned the 2023 Edith R. Mirrielees Award for Creative Writing. After graduation she plans to further her research as a graduate student.

Avery Truman is an environmental studies and geography major attending Utah State University. After graduating in 2026, she hopes to pursue her passion for earth science.

Amiee Zhao is an English and Politics, Philosophy, and Law major from Oxford College of Emory University. After graduation, she hopes to pursue a PhD in English or Education to prepare for a teaching career.